This book investigates how professionals, architects and others can help reduce the impacts of natural disasters by designing resilient housing.

Examples of housing reconstruction projects have been drawn from several countries around the world in Australia, the Americas and Asia. The book will be based on discussions with various stakeholders, professionals, humanitarian workers, government agencies and disaster-affected communities – through fieldwork in Australia, Bangladesh, Haiti, Japan, Sri Lanka, USA and Vietnam.